Background:

A civil service commission (commission) for a county sheriff's office consists of three members appointed by the board of county commissioners. In the case of a commission serving multiple counties, members are delegated by the boards of county commissioners of each county.

Members of the commission serve six-year terms. At the time of appointment, no more than two members may be from the same political party.

A commission has a number of responsibilities. Examples include:

- creating suitable rules and regulations for examinations, appointments, and promotions;
- inspecting departments and offices under the commission's jurisdiction; and
- conducting hearings and investigations.

Two members of a civil service commission constitute a quorum and the votes of two concurring members are sufficient for the decision of the commission.
